FUNCTIONS & PRIVATE DINING

Welcome to The Spaniards

Built in 1585 as a tollgate on the Finchley boundary, The Spaniards has more than a few tales to tell. This characterful inn was named after the Spanish Ambassador to James I of England and rumour has it highwayman Dick Turpin was born there, whilst his father was landlord in the early 1700s. Immortalised by Dickens in The Pickwick Papers, and allegedly the place in which Keats penned 'Ode to a Nightingale', The Spaniards has a romantic, nostalgic air and a feeling of time stood still.

Housed in a Grade II listed building, The Spaniards has been lovingly preserved, combining traditional wood-panelling and period features with gentle contemporary touches.

With private dining rooms available or a cosy table nestled within the main pub, the Spaniards offers the perfect place to celebrate with colleagues, family and friends or soak up the atmosphere in this beautiful British pub.

Our garden offers ample seating, sheltered tables and barbecue facilities for the summer months, as well as patio heating for those cooler days.

Perched on the edge of Hampstead Heath and oozing with history, just five minutes' walk away from Hampstead Heath and well-connected to the rest of London by bus and tube, The Spaniards is a unique hidden gem of a pub, undoubtedly worth venturing off the beaten track to discover.
